Story highlights "I don't think anyone could have imagined this particular form of government," he says He's also a conservative Catholic from the south, where he says he's never seen religion so stripped down

Charles Kimball: Republicans are groping for a way forward Following is the text of a speech delivered by Charles Kimball, a conservative Catholic writer and broadcaster, at the seventh annual "Political Capitalist" conference in Chantilly, Virginia, in October 2012. For three centuries, since the time of Holy Week, Catholics have recognized that the creation and the redemption of the world are embodied in the life of Jesus Christ. Our faith, which has endured such perilous times, has never been more necessary, and never more threatened. The world, as I see it, is at a crossroads. It is politically polarized over issues of economics, of morality, of identity, of national security. We are told we are so divided and partisan and polarized that we are headed for another Great Depression. We may be headed for a real depression. We may be headed for war. We may be headed for a national security disaster. But I'm going to argue to you that we are facing the greatest threat to our civilization since the time of the Roman Empire: a spiritual crisis. Our fundamental institutions are under siege. We are told we need to embrace the idea of progress, but progress of what? I believe our civilization's greatest moment has come, not in the midst of progress in the sciences, in the arts, in the preservation of our traditional values. Charles Kimball I believe our greatest moment in the long history of our civilization has come during the time of Caesar and Christ. I believe that the third millennium of the Christian era is as crucial to our survival as the second millennium of the Roman Empire was for our survival. For Christians, the tension between Caesar and Christ is not simply a theological or ecclesiastical issue. It is a political and a national security issue as well. It is, I believe, the greatest threat to our
