The 8.1 version of USB Security Protection is provided as a free download .Human parainfluenza viruses (HPIVs), members of the paramyxoviruses, are important agents of human disease. They infect the upper and lower respiratory tracts and have been implicated in severe respiratory illnesses, including laryngotracheobronchitis, bronchiolitis, and pneumonia. HPIVs have been divided into two major groups based on their pathogenic characteristics and serological and genetic relationships. Human parainfluenza virus type 1 (HPIV-1) and type 2 (HPIV-2) are closely related and only separated by the presence of a second transcription initiation site within the conserved sequences upstream of the transcriptional start site (TSS) of the mRNA coding for the N1 protein, which is the only envelope glycoprotein of these viruses. HPIV-3 has diverged further and only a single transcriptional start within the conserved sequences upstream of the N2 transcriptional start site is present. HPIV-4 is phylogenetically distinct from the other HPIVs but has been associated with human respiratory tract disease since the first identification of this virus. The full length genomic sequence of HPIV-1 has been reported in several publications, including, for example, PCT publication WO 95/18185 (the contents of which are incorporated herein by reference), and Churg et al., J. Virol. 68(4):2263–2272 (1994). The full length genomic sequence of HPIV-2 has been 570a42141b
