We give full clean version and keygen of SAP. The partner benefit: a new way to measure the impact of health insurance on women. With the increasing demand for women's health insurance, policy makers and researchers are concerned that the rights of uninsured women may not be fully protected. Recently, concerns have been voiced regarding the extent to which women insured through the employment-based health insurance (EBHI) system may have their ability to use health care protected and protected against health risks limited because of their female identity. But the question has not been addressed specifically in terms of the benefits a woman may be able to obtain for herself by enrolling in EBHI. To provide an empirical basis for the use of EBHI by women, a research project was undertaken to measure the nonhealth benefits of the EBHI program. A random sample of 798 California women with children aged 0 to 10 years was drawn from EBHI enrollees and a comparison group of uninsured women. The sample for the present study was restricted to low-income women (below 150 percent of the federal poverty level) to avoid the potential selection problems associated with the inclusion of Medicaid enrollees. A research instrument was developed to assess personal gains and disadvantages of being insured. The benefit cost ratio was computed as a measure of the relative value of the benefit in terms of the risk undertaken by the insured. The findings show that there is a partner benefit from EBHI. Women with children are particularly responsive to such benefits, consistent with a role for wife-caretaking, and the benefits are largest for those with the least education and the lowest personal resources. The benefits are more positive than is the case for other insured persons. The value of the benefits to women enrollees is also a function of the 3da54e8ca3
