The application is specialized in protecting sensitive files, permanently deleting data, locking files, as well as securely cleaning your browser's history. Clean feature skeleton

The application reveals a well-structured suite of features. You are given access to an Explorer-like panel that allows you to browse throughout the content of files and folders stored in your computer. It takes simple drag-and-drop actions in order to lock or delete files securely from your system so they cannot be recovered using third-party specialized tools. A comprehensive help manual is available online, in case you need extra assistance with the configuration process. Aside from the main interface which helps you remove or lock items, you may rely on a small panel that resides on your screen. It can be docked so it does not occupy too much space on the desktop. The minimalist window helps you encrypt or shred files using drag-and-drop actions. General configuration settings The place where the encrypted files are stored is called 'Digital Locker.' It is password-protected so other users cannot gain access to your private information. You may also decrypt files on the go and employ batch actions for shredding multiple files/folders at

Tests have pointed out that UltraSentry Crack For Windows carries out a task quickly. It is quite friendly with system resources so the overall performance of the system is not affected. Support for several profiles A smart feature included in the package enables you to work with several preset profiles in order to automate several actions, such as securely delete your browser's history, cache, autocomplete data, and unwanted cookies, and look for and permanently destroy the contents of the 'User' folder that tracks Internet usage and other habits. An information security researcher has published a proof-of-concept exploit that could allow a hacker to take over the control of an infected computer by the execution of a specially crafted document. The flaw was found in the way Internet Explorer managed an ActiveX control, and could affect all users that have downloaded or installed the latest update of the web browser since August 1st. The vulnerability was discovered by Kevin Beaumont, a security researcher at Vectra Networks, a forensics firm based in the UK. The flaw is a well-known vulnerability in the way Internet Explorer treats the proprietary ActiveX control, or OLE control, that was created by Microsoft to allow the embedding of ActiveX controls in documents. The ability to manipulate ActiveX controls is a feature that can be used by websites to add interactive content to a page. By tricking the browser into executing a malicious ActiveX document, Beaumont found it was possible for an attacker to take complete control over a vulnerable computer. In a post published on the Vectra Networks blog, Beaumont explains that a series of configuration changes in Internet Explorer caused the browser to grant the attacker complete control over the system, and enabled the attacker to shut down the computer by sending a special type of XML document that forces the computer to stop running. The vulnerability was disclosed to Microsoft in March 2011, and Beaumont says the company acknowledged the problem and promised to fix it. He also says that Internet Explorer 6, 7, 8, and 9 are affected by the flaw. "[A]ffected machines will not be able to install any new software or programs, as the exploits will force the executable code into a suspended state," Beaumont says. "This allows the attacker to execute code which has the ability to do anything they like to the computer." Although the
