How can I install two different kernels on a Debian system? I am building a new computer and I would like to use the new kernel, but I would also like to use a different kernel for testing. I know how to install a new kernel. But how can I do this, without removing the existing kernel? A: It's a simple matter of installing the new kernel and the modules that go with it. The modaliases (packages) are your friend. You can use them to tell apt-get/dpkg/aptitude that you'd like to use the linux-image-3.16.0-4-686-pae package (the actual package name of the kernel) as well as the linux-image-3.16.0-4-generic-pae package which is the generic kernel you want to use. If you're not a fan of modaliases, just download the kernel and modules with apt-get and install them manually. A: You can also add the old kernel to Grub, so that it can be selected by your system at boot time. This lets you use the old kernel for a while, and switch to the new kernel eventually. The nice thing about this approach is that, since the old kernel is still loaded, you don't have to worry about keeping it's config around 81e310abbf
