He's the author of several best sellers, the producer and director of several award-winning movies, and a featured guest expert on CBS, ABC, FOX, NBC, NPR, and PBS. When you meet him, you might want to call him Michael. But that's just him. Everybody knows him by his last name. Before he was an author, Michael was a front-row actor in high-profile television shows, had roles in dozens of Hollywood movies, and was a sought after actor, director, writer and producer. He was featured in over two hundred commercials and won a multitude of awards for his directing and acting. That's a lot of information to wrap your head around. But it's true. Today we're talking about a lost art - a hero. His story is as strange as they come, and it's all happening right now. Michael is having trouble moving his career along, despite being on top of the world, with everything he's done, and so many people have said how great he is. He has no idea why. You see, Michael is everything an author should be. He's got plenty of success in his past, and he has plans for the future. He's smart, hardworking, and talented. He knows the ropes. Yet he's feeling at a loss. And while all his coworkers are raving about how great he is, and how great his book is, and how great his book trailer is…he just can't get any momentum going. After years of hard work and loyalty, Michael's manager is now promoting another author's book instead of his.
