All of the species formerly placed in Borellia belong to the southern clade of Old World warblers (subfamily Sylviinae). Taxonomy In 1773, the French zoologist Mathurin Jacques Brisson included a description of the boreal hummingbird (Selasphorus canicollis) in his Ornithologie based on a specimen collected in La Plata. He used the binomial name "Rallus canicollis", from the Latin for "railler, or warbler". The specific epithet canicollis is the diminutive form of caniculus, Latin for "small dog". In 1775 the Swedish naturalist Carl Linnaeus included the boreal hummingbird in the first volume of his Systema Naturae. He used the name Rallus canicollis. The specific name is the Latin for "small dog". Linnaeus included a description, and his explicit placement of the boreal hummingbird in the coraciine family (Coraciidae) is reflected in the genus name Borellia. Over the course of the following decades, several authors moved the boreal hummingbird out of Coraciidae. Dutch naturalist Pieter Boddaert coined the name Coracias canicollis in 17 f30f4ccada
