

The result is a new way to play football, where every action comes to life on-screen and every player's abilities come to life as they perform movement patterns and actions that are unique to their position and professional level. This technology will be supported by a new artificial intelligence (AI) engine that takes in data from football clubs globally and uses it to better understand how the pros play the game at their highest level. This enables the engine to make fundamental adjustments to how a team behaves to make them more tactically intelligent in matches. FIFA 20 saw the introduction of Select, an intelligent coach option that could perform reactive and sophisticated tactical decisions for your players in real-time. Select works with the game AI to choose the correct line-up, tactics and substitutions based on the current situations of each game. It can also predict player's future movement as well as propose alternative set-up suggestions, like moving a specific player to another position, to help you out. In FIFA 21, Select takes that intelligence further by being able to not only give you suggestions, but also judge whether a particular player's performance is limited by fatigue or injury. Additionally, the AI can now take in contextual data from other relevant actions within the game to build an even more informed understanding of how your players are playing, how they would perform against a team of their individual strength and how they can impact specific game situations. This new technology also provides a deeper understanding of how players will adapt and respond to specific situations. Having individual player AI-driven tactics and movement improves the understanding of how players will respond and adapt to specific conditions in games, therefore making it easier to predict how your player will perform in scenarios they might be unfamiliar with. FIFA 22's new artificial intelligence will further evolve throughout the Season Mode in a single match on its own, making its decision-making process significantly more intelligent and calculating as the game progresses. Now, with the same style and depth of gameplay, FIFA 22 will invite players to take control of their individual players and tactical play. With this in mind, players will receive multiple tactical feedback including substitutions, positioning, formations and play styles. For the first time in a FIFA game, you will play matches without having to worry about leaving your player's position. Real-world experts, accessed through the FIFA Global Lens, reveal the information and feedback that would be provided to you in a real match. Learn about tactical substitutions before kick
