Q: Swift 3 with Firebase in XCode 10 i'm starting with Swift and i'm trying to create this Firebase Database with Swift 3, the problem is when i try to create a read/write function i got this compile error: Cannot invoke 'child' with an argument list of type '(child : @escaping FDataSnapshot) -> QuerySnapshot' On this line: `ref.child("room").child(userUUID).child("table").queryOrderedByKey().observeSingleEvent(of:.value) { (snapshot) in` If i need to post the code and something else help me, i'm a fresher in Swift so i need some guidelines and help. A: Make sure you add the typed snapshots parameter to `observeSingleEvent`, like this: `ref.child("room").child(userUUID).child("table").queryOrderedByKey().observeSingleEvent(of:.value, with: { (snapshot) in // do something with snapshot })` Amongst other interesting ideas, the Find Where is an app to get the exact location of other Find Where users and group them. In the video below, you see some prototypes by Erik from Iceland. It is a geolocation app called Find Where and it is available on the App Store. aa67ecbc25

The possibilities with Themes and Variables are enormous. Keep in mind that Themes are (wether by default or not) “sealed” with your computer and are only valid for the domain you installed on it. The first thing that pops into my mind when I think about some time has come before me, is having a coffee with friends and colleagues and talking about the future of programming. What will happen in a few months, in a year and what will be the change? Will the JavaScript Development become something mainstream or will there be a big change in how people teach programming? These are just a couple of thoughts that came into my head and I would like to share my idea with you. This blog post is about “JavaScript... Sketchup Academy is currently in Beta testing!
