The Dunmer race has built their culture and society upon the ruins of the long-forgotten nation of Vvardenfell. Over time the legacy of the long-departed Vvardenfell has faded, its secrets and knowledge lost in the mists of the ages. The Imperials rule over the Dunmer with the iron fist of a cruel, oppressive regime that nearly matches the barbarity of the Age of the Dragon. All is not lost. Thousands of years ago the empire was invaded by the Ebonheart Pact and the region was subsequently conquered by the church. The Dunmer still live in this region within converted basilicas, monasteries, and convents, but live in fear of the church and the oppressive empire. Most have never even been to the surface. Now, in the far away regions of the "forgotten" Black Isles, lies the greatest, most dangerous secret of all: the long-forgotten temple of the sleeping god Matron Awakened. Thrown into the dungeon once the temple was no longer a secret, the monks have been trapped inside for centuries. In order to escape the temple, the Watcher will need to awaken the sleeping god and bring the temple to life to get everyone out. Diana Iakhlef (1958-?) was a Canadian illustrator and painter who worked for several women's magazines, including McCall's, Redbook, Cosmopolitan, Redbook, and Good Housekeeping. She was also the cover illustrator for Playboy magazine in the 1970s. Best known for her illustrations for erotic comics, particularly Dark Girls, she also illustrated children's books such as Apple Pie and Baby Pea by Janet McNair. She was also a successful and prolific pinup and girls' model as well as painter. In 2009, her paintings were exhibited at the Miami City Ballet Festival. Iakhlef died in her sleep at her Santa Monica, California home on 25 April 2019, after battling congestive heart failure. Iakhlef had been suffering from depression for years. She lived in a Santa Monica apartment and had been in and out of mental health facilities. She had been living on a streetcorner, eating soup and listening to rock music. Sick of being followed and harassed by collectors for artwork she sold for a paltry price, she said goodbye to her home and possessions. On July 9, 2019, The San Diego Union-Tribune reported that the majority of Diana Iakhlef's estate had been sold to the Mattel corporation, and the money would be used to benefit the Breast Cancer Research Foundation, the non-profit organization for which she had been art director for their book department. Quotes "Diana would just tell me stories, some of them nightmarish
