The activity of glutamate decarboxylase in the rat cerebral cortex under conditions of increased blood flow in response to serotonin and norepinephrine, and the localisation of the enzyme and the neurotransmitter in the neuropil. The rise in the metabolism of both serotonin and norepinephrine has been shown to be accompanied by a marked rise in blood flow in the rat cerebral cortex. The functional significance of this correlation is still not clear. The aim of the present work was to study the changes in the activities of the enzymes involved in the synthesis of 5-HT in the cortex, and particularly the activity of glutamate decarboxylase (GAD) and the concentrations of 5-HT and GABA, in response to an increase in blood flow. Previous studies have indicated that GDF-8 appears to be required for the maturation of motor neuron axons, and an additional signal from muscle must be required to elicit contraction. In embryos lacking GDF-8, motor axons are correctly specified and reach the target but are too short to reach the muscle^[@CR11]^. Although conditional ablation of *Wnt11* and *Ctnnb1* in the cranial region of the mouse embryo leads to misrouting of sensory axons, proprioceptive axons appear to be spared^[@CR38],[@CR39]^. It has been proposed that the persistence of proprioceptive neurons may be due to the attraction of sensory axons to the muscle contractions that occur in the absence of GDF-8 signaling^[@CR11]^. Together, these studies highlight a role of Wnt11 signaling in motor neuron differentiation during embryogenesis, whereas the role of Wnt11 signaling in the postnatal brain has not been elucidated. The persistence of proprioceptive neurons and their axons in the absence of *Wnt11* signaling in embryogenesis raises the question of whether Wnt11 may also have a role in proprioceptive axon extension in the postnatal brain. Previous studies have shown that Wnt11 is expressed in the brain by GABAergic neurons in the adult mouse^[@CR20],[@CR21],[@CR24]^. However, the ablation of *Wnt11* in the adult mouse and mouse embryo does not appear to result in impaired CNS myelination (data not shown). Therefore, in order to
